

Who makes sure Grady's diabetes doesn't land him in the hospital? Ironically, it's his public hospital.

A world of care. Housed in a world of good.

Grady Love first learned he had diabetes when blurry vision forced him to go to San Francisco General Hospital and Trauma Center - his local public hospital. That was 3 years ago.

Grady's diabetes could have cost him his vision, his limbs, and his life. But thanks to the care he's received from one of S.F. General's outpatient clinics, Grady has stayed out of the hospital ever since. The clinic gives him the medicine he needs and just as important, they helped him change his diet and exercise habits. "They changed my lifestyle... and they saved my life," says Grady.

You see, public hospitals don't just take care of people with emergencies; we also provide preventive and ongoing care for patients with life-threatening chronic conditions like diabetes and asthma. We're California's public hospitals, and we're here when you need us.

CALIFORNIA'S PUBLIC HOSPITALS.
DOING A WORLD OF GOOD.™

California Association of Public Hospitals and Health Systems
Share your story with us. Log on to www.caph.org/patientstories.